SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 24.

"BITTERS" ANALYZED IN COURT.—A suit is going on in the New York Supreme Court between the parties who own the recipe of "Vinegar Bitters" and the manufacturers thereof. One of the latter was examined the other day.

"What is your business?" began the lawyer.

"A manufacturer," was the reply.

"Manufacturer of what?"

"Vinegar Bitters."

"I hear you called doctor. Of what school of medicine are you a graduate?"

"Not of any."

"Did you ever practice medicine?"

"I did not."

Continuing his testimony the witness, having been handed a bottle of Vinegar Bitters, acknowledged that he had prepared the labels and that the "Dr." Walker referred to on them was Joseph Walker. He conceded that the prefix "Dr." was unwarranted.

"Will you swear to this Court," pursued the lawyer in a determined tone, "that the prevalent idea in your mind in putting the name of Dr. Walker on the labels as the inventor of Vinegar Bitters was not to induce in the public mind a belief that these bitters were the invention of an educated and regular physician?"

"W-e-l-l," replied the witness, with slow deliberation, "I suppose that was the prevalent idea."

"Don't you know it was, sir?" thundered out the ex-Judge.

"W-e-l-l, y-e-s."

"And was it not in the belief that if the public supposed the bitters were the invention of a physician you would thereby secure a much larger sale of the stuff than would be possible if the public supposed it was the discovery of an ignorant pretender?"

"Yes, I supposed we could thereby secure a larger sale."

Three witnesses testified to the ingredients of Vinegar Bitters. They gave the component parts as wormwood, two varieties of aloes, gum arabic, gum guaiacum, gum weed and water.
